Jennifer Cecere
Pratt Institute
200 Willoughby Avenue
Brooklyn, NY 11205
Pratt Sculpture Park
www.pratt.edu/sculpture

For directions to the Sculpture Park, please visit www.pratt.edu/campus/directions.

Pratt Institute's Department of Fine Arts offers graduate and undergraduate courses in sculpture. For more information on Pratt's sculpture program, call 718.636.3634.

© BoB hANDeLmAN 2007

Arman
David Henderson
Nova

AmY ARoNoFF
Jackson Martin

Hans Van de Bovenkamp

PRATT INSTITUTE sculpture park
Jennifer Cecere
Pratt Institute
200 Willoughby Avenue
Brooklyn, NY 11205
Pratt Sculpture Park
www.pratt.edu/sculpture

For directions to the Sculpture Park, please visit www.pratt.edu/campus/directions.

Pratt Institute’s Department of Fine Arts offers graduate and undergraduate courses in sculpture. For more information on Pratt’s sculpture program, call 718.636.3634.

PRATT INSTITUTE sculpture park
David Weinrib, Curator

Yet actually, our choices for the sculpture Park are motivated by a search for the strongest of works, no matter the style. Pratt Institute’s sculpture Park seems designed to demonstrate that we are in a moment in which there is a plethora of sculpture styles.

our students’ experience of campus life and provides an oasis for the Brooklyn community and the general public as well. I am aided in this effort by Associate Curator Harry Gordon and Preparator Jacques Zanetti. the result of our collaboration is a sculpture park that enriches liken the sculpture Park to a symphony; our challenge is to bring all of the parts in harmony.

to place these pieces on the campus—among its various building facades, and open and closed landscapes—is indeed a spatial and architectural challenge. I

to choose specific sites for their work.

and graduates kindly loan their work to the exhibition, and the park includes a number of commissioned works as well. the sculptors often visit the campus the exhibition is a revolving and evolving one, with most of the work remaining on the campus for several years. Well-known and emerging artists, faculty, buildings provide an excellent backdrop for the 50 sculptures that fill the park each year.

Pratt Institute’s sculpture Park, the largest in New York City, stretches across the 25-acre Brooklyn campus. the Institute’s lush, green lawns and historical

All Sculpture Photos by Diana Pau unless otherwise noted.

Pratt Institute sculpture park

PRATT INSTITUTE

David Weinrib, Curator

To place these pieces on the campus—among its various building facades, and open and closed landscapes—is indeed a spatial and architectural challenge. I liken the Sculpture Park to a symphony; our challenge is to bring all of the parts in harmony.

To choose specific sites for their work.

And graduates kindly loan their work to the exhibition, and the park includes a number of commissioned works as well. The sculptors often visit the campus.

The exhibition is a revolving and evolving one, with most of the works remaining on the campus for several years. Well-known and emerging artists, faculty, and graduates kindly loan their work to the exhibition, and the park includes a number of commissioned works as well. The sculptors often visit the campus to choose specific sites for their works.

David Weinrib, Curator